

Published in the Press Democrat April 2020

Dear Editor

Honesty up front, as Phil Weil said, I am a tremendous supporter of President Trump. He has succeeded in doing positive things for this country that no other president has. Perhaps President Trump isn't as erudite as Weil wishes or thinks he himself is, but knowledgeable people always write and speak to specific audiences. In public events, President Trump addresses the entire country—the workingmen and women, the college educated, the English learners. They know exactly what he's saying and don't care about his adverbs and umms. At his rallies of thousands of fans, (15%-42% are Democrat or independent voters), he uses "tremendous," "incredible," and "fantastic." His audiences love it! They're with him all the way. The liberal media would never use those laudatory words when speaking about President Trump. So he does. In top-level meetings open to the press, we have seen President Trump as serious, articulate, gracious, and presidential. You, Mr. Weil, cannot presume to know how he thinks. To his Cabinet, military leaders, doctors, and the other professionals in his administration, we see him use language of the educated, experienced, and successful businessman (and adult) he is. He's my president.

Sandy Metzger

References: Washington Examiner.com, Thehill.com Redstate.com